

150 Years: Remembering Worst Civil War Battle on Missouri Soil

Over the next few weeks, the Shelby County Herald will be remembering the horrific Centralia Battle in which many Shelby County men lost their lives. On September 13 and 14, there will be a reenactment of the battle in Centralia. More information can be found at www.centraliabattlefield.com/reenactment.

by Corby Cochenour
Herald Reporter

When one thinks of 150 years ago, they realize that anyone from that time is no longer here on earth and so many it is a time forgotten in history. But each piece of history has helped to form who we are today and who we will be in the future.

During the Civil War, the most horrific battle took place on Missouri soil at Centralia and many men from Shelby County and surrounding areas lost their lives. September 27, 1864 is a day in American history that should not be forgotten.

Before the battle, according to wikipedia.org, the following took place: "In the fall of 1864, the Confederates, faced with a rapidly deteriorating position, launched an invasion of northern Missouri. It was led by General Sterling Price, and his Missouri State Guard. The object was to influence the 1864 presidential election by capturing St. Louis and the state capital at Jefferson City. As part of his strategy, Price encouraged guerrilla warfare, especially the disruption of the railroads. "Bloody Bill" Anderson and his guerrilla company were among those who took part.

On September 23, 1864, Anderson engaged in a skirmish in Boone County, Missouri, seven miles east of Rocheport. His men managed to kill eleven Federal soldiers and three black civilian teamsters. The Federals responded the next day by shooting six of Anderson's men who were captured at a home in Rocheport.

That same day, September 24, Anderson attacked the pro-Union town of Fayette, losing thirteen killed and more than thirty wounded. Only one Union soldier had been killed and two wounded."

On the morning of September 27, Captain Bill Anderson and Young's Creek, not far from the home of Colonel M. G. Singletary. There were about 225 men, all told, in our combined command. Funny, isn't it? I've met or heard of at least 10,000 men who claimed to have been, with Quantrell or his Lieutenants during the war, when the truth is there never were more than 350 or 400 from one end of the war to the other.

"In the morning, Anderson took about thirty of his company and went into Centralia. I was not with him, nor was any accounts of the battle, but a very interesting account is one from Frank James, Jesse James brother. He returned to Centralia in February 1910 and the following excerpts are from the Kansas City Star, February 16, 1910:

"The most terrible conflict of the Civil War took place on Missouri soil. More lives were lost in proportion to the number of men engaged than were lost on any battlefield in American history. It was the battle of Centralia, September 27, 1864."

According to the article, after it was confirmed that the Federals were in the area, James described the battle. "I can see them now yonder on that ridge. I don't care what your histories say, from hearsay, and which Todd condemned when the boys returned."

According to the article, after it was confirmed that the Federals were in the area, James described the battle. "I can see them now yonder on that ridge. I don't care what your histories say, they carried a black flag. It apparently was a black apron tied to a stick. We captured it in the battle that followed. No, we had no flag. We had no time to get one and no chance to carry it if we had one. The Yankees stopped near the rise of the hill. Both sides were in full view of each other, though nearly half a mile distant. The Yankees dismounted, gave their horses into charge of a detail of men and prepared to fight.

"John Koger, a funny fellow in our ranks, watched the Yankees get down from their horses, and said, 'Why the fools are going to fight us on foot?' And then added in seriousness, 'God help 'em!'

"We dismounted to tighten the bolts on the horses, and then at the word of command started by Captain Bill Anderson. In that fight were many older residents of Shelby County. In that fight were Major James S. Rollins, James H. Waugh, John S. Samuel, James C. Orr and others. They only escaped by pretending to be Methodist ministers on their way to a conference. Nearly all the Centralia visitors of that day are dead."

The following is Frank James' version: "The day before we had had a small skirmish down in Goshin's lane, between Columbia and Rocheport. I don't know what day it was. We could scarcely keep account of months and years at that time, much less days. We killed a dozen Yankee soldiers in Goshin's lane and captured a wagon train of provisions and stuff.

"But Anderson had much to make him merciless. You remember the treatment his father and sisters received at the hands of the Kansas Jayhawkers. That night we camped on one of the branches ending into

"But we couldn't stop in that terrible charge for anything. Up the hill we went, yelling like wild Indians. Such shrieks, young man, you will never hear as broke the stillness of that day after the battle and sent to this country for internment. Mr. Hale went to Surgeon for the purpose of identifying the bodies and had the remains shipped home to relatives. The other Union soldiers who met their death at this time were buried in a trench by the citizens of Centralia. B. F. Dunn and other citizens of Shelby County also made a trip to Centralia for the purpose of identifying others and bringing home the remains, but were unable to recognize any of them and left them buried in the trench.

A letter written by Enoch Hunt was sent to his family after the battle. He was one of the few that escaped with his life. Even after such a horrific battle, this letter shows the resolve and character of the Union soldiers. It appeared in the Centraia Fireside. "Dear ones at home. We had a fight yesterday at Centralia, with Anderson and all got killed except 15 that we know of. We run to Surgeon. We had 150 killed, they scalped all the officers. You may think that I want to get home, but I don't care. I am doing well. I stopped at Mr. Conger's as we came up there. All the folks were well. The Rebels was at there the night before. I have seen more dead men than a few. I was not afraid, even when I saw men brother and tearing my mother's right arm from her shoulder. There is two sides to the quieting question. Besides, we did not do the one-thousand part made in my mother's house one night, killing my seven year old brother and tearing my mother's right arm from her shoulder. And I thank God that in the end, every man will have to answer only for what he did, and not what he is reputed to have done."

According to different reports from the day, Union Major A.Y.E. Johnston, fell among the first and was shot in the head by Jesse James.

Many of the Union soldiers who lost their lives on that day were from Shelby County and likely should have remained a teacher than to lead so many left-behind families. Fifty years after the event, The Shelby County Massacre reports state they were scalped, had limbs severed, fingers removed and more brutal acts. These men should not be forgotten and beginning next week, we will highlight a few of the men from Shelby County.

Many of the Union soldiers who lost their lives on that day were from Shelby County and likely should have remained a teacher than to lead so many left-behind families. Fifty years after the event, The Shelby County Massacre reports state they were scalped, had limbs severed, fingers removed and more brutal acts. These men should not be forgotten and beginning next week, we will highlight a few of the men from Shelby County.

According to different reports from the day, Union Major A.Y.E. Johnston, fell among the first and was shot in the head by Jesse James.

Many of the Union soldiers who lost their lives on that day were from Shelby County and likely should have remained a teacher than to lead so many left-behind families. Fifty years after the event, The Shelby County Massacre reports state they were scalped, had limbs severed, fingers removed and more brutal acts. These men should not be forgotten and beginning next week, we will highlight a few of the men from Shelby County.

Many of the Union soldiers who lost their lives on that day were from Shelby County and likely should have remained a teacher than to lead so many left-behind families. Fifty years after the event, The Shelby County Massacre reports state they were scalped, had limbs severed, fingers removed and more brutal acts. These men should not be forgotten and beginning next week, we will highlight a few of the men from Shelby County.

Many of the Union soldiers who lost their lives on that day were from Shelby County and likely should have remained a teacher than to lead so many left-behind families. Fifty years after the event, The Shelby County Massacre reports state they were scalped, had limbs severed, fingers removed and more brutal acts. These men should not be forgotten and beginning next week, we will highlight a few of the men from Shelby County.

Many of the Union soldiers who lost their lives on that day were from Shelby County and likely should have remained a teacher than to lead so many left-behind families. Fifty years after the event, The Shelby County Massacre reports state they were scalped, had limbs severed, fingers removed and more brutal acts. These men should not be forgotten and beginning next week, we will highlight a few of the men from Shelby County.

Many of the Union soldiers who lost their lives on that day were from Shelby County and likely should have remained a teacher than to lead so many left-behind families. Fifty years after the event, The Shelby County Massacre reports state they were scalped, had limbs severed, fingers removed and more brutal acts. These men should not be forgotten and beginning next week, we will highlight a few of the men from Shelby County.

Many of the Union soldiers who lost their lives on that day were from Shelby County and likely should have remained a teacher than to lead so many left-behind families. Fifty years after the event, The Shelby County Massacre reports state they were scalped, had limbs severed, fingers removed and more brutal acts. These men should not be forgotten and beginning next week, we will highlight a few of the men from Shelby County.

Many of the Union soldiers who lost their lives on that day were from Shelby County and likely should have remained a teacher than to lead so many left-behind families. Fifty years after the event, The Shelby County Massacre reports state they were scalped, had limbs severed, fingers removed and more brutal acts. These men should not be forgotten and beginning next week, we will highlight a few of the men from Shelby County.