Falling Gate

Little Son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Boling Loses Life in Accident. 1931

Henry Owen, little two year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Boling of southeast of Clarence, was killed late Monday afternoon by a falling gate at the farm home.

The boy and his sister was playing near the gate, which gave entrance to the farm yard, and it is supposed that he had climbed up on the gate. The top hinge gave way allowing the gate to fall with the child and killed it almost instantly. The sister called its mother at once but the child was probably dead when she arrived at the scene of the accident.

Henry Owen, was the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Boling and was born February 17, 1929. He was an unusually sturdy child, and it will be remembered that he was the prize winning baby at the Shelby county fair in 1930.

He leaves, besides his parents, a sister, Ellen Claire, a younger brother Philip Taylor, grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Taylor, of Leesburg, Mrs. Mattie Boling, of south of Clarence, a great grandmother, Mrs. Laura Taylor, and a number of other relatives in this community. This fine little fellow had a host of admirers who regret to hear of his untimely death.

Mrs. Kemp joined the church Jan. 1, 1874. She was devoted to her church and attended until physical infirmities prevented. But after attendance was impossible she never missed an opportunity to say an encouraging word to visitors in her home.

She lived a most consistent Christian life. Her kindly disposition, her charitable heart and her habit of expressing her appreciation made her beloved of all who sought her out.

Long months of failing health had prepared her for the end which came quietly and with only a few minutes warning.

Too much can not be said for the tender care of her daughter and Ed Kemp. The beautiful devotion between the two women was an inspiration to all. On her last evening she expressed her appreciation of the care and love they had always given her.

She passed away Tuesday, March 17, and her going was very sudden.

Lovie Kathryn Haley, daughter of A. M. and Sarah Jane Bishop, was born on a farm six miles south of Clarence on September 6, 1891. When she was four years of age, her mother passed away and the family moved to Clarence. She attended the Clarence schools and always manifested the deepest interest in her school work. She graduated from the Clarence High school in 1909, winning the honor of being Valedictorian. Her interest in education was maintained thruout her life. She read widely and was always willing to help in the literary work of the various organizations to which she belonged. She possessed marked creative ability and among the most treasured mementos which her loved ones have are the fragments of beautiful poetry which she wrote.

On October 20, 1917, she was married to Dickson L. Haley, a marriage which was one of perfect happiness. With the exception of two years spent in Detroit, Mr. and Mrs. Haley have lived in Clarence. Mrs. Haley's gracious hospitality made of their home a place of pleasure where friends were always welcome.

Mrs. Haley was a member of the Methodist church, where she was a faithful worker in the Philathea class which she had served as president. She was also a member of the Order of the Eastern Star which she served as Worthy Matron only a few years ago.

On May 9th, 1936 she passed away peacefully in Barnes hospital, St. Louis, where she had been taken only the day before.

She is survived by her husband, Dickson L. Haley, her father, A. M. Bishop, a brother, Charles Bishop, a sister, Mrs. Oliver Hedrick, all of Clarence, a brother, Harry Bushop, of Kansas City, and a sister, Mrs. Clarence Dale, of Chicago.

After her sudden passing her husband found on his desk an unfinished poem written by Mrs. Haley just before she was stricken by the illness which proved fatal. Written just as she was faring forth into that lovely world beyond, it expressed her courage and gentleness.

"The day is slowly fading,
The sun hangs low in the West,
And I am just a waiting—
The time I love best.
For it's now you will be coming.

"The day was long without you
Yet I know you had to go
And your coming back at evening
Is the sweetest joy I know.
For you see, ah, yes I'll tell you
It's because I love you so.

"The cares of the day are forgotten
I'm glad - - - - -"

And on this note of joy she laid aside the cares of this world and entered into her heritage of peace in that other, better world.
