The Korean Conflict

The boys had not been home very long, it seemed, when trouble came up with the Communists in Korea. American troops were sent to Korea as a police action on June 27, 1950, rather than as a declaration of war. Reservists were called back into service and new draftees were inducted.

For three years this was continued in the small area which was Korea. Again Shelby became familiar with strange names and strange customs from this faraway land. On June 27, 1953, hostilities were declared over and the boys began to come home once more. High prices for labor and for goods in general, continued. Good crops for a number of consecutive years helped to bring an era of prosperity to this agricultural community.
